Quality chicks so that every farmer can produce chicken: Ivorian hatchery NEXTEKCI celebrates 20 years

Founded in 2006 in Agnibilékrou, the NEXTEKCI hatchery has set itself a simple mission: to make quality day-old chicks accessible to every poultry farmer — from large intensive farms to family backyards — so that people have access to local, healthy and affordable poultry.

Agnibilékrou, Côte d'Ivoire — Twenty years ago, on 1 June 2006, Abdul Hussein Chouman founded NEXTEKCI in Agnibilékrou, in eastern Côte d'Ivoire, close to the border with Ghana. He came from a family of farmers: his father had patiently built a laying-hen farm in the same town. His conviction has not changed since: for people to have access to chicken, farmers must first have access to good chicks.

From the very beginning, NEXTEKCI has been a modern hatchery: parent stock selected to high standards, controlled incubation, careful sorting of chicks at hatching, ventilated and labelled boxes, and regular dispatches twice a week.

Our mission: the right chick for every farmer

Not every farmer has the same project or the same means. That is why NEXTEKCI offers a complete range designed for hot climates.

White broilers, for fast production. White broilers grow quickly and are sold at around 30 to 40 days.

NEXTEKCI produces white broiler chicks adapted to conditions in our countries, for equipped farmers who run short, regular cycles.

Premium coloured broilers, for more flexible farming. White broilers have one constraint: after 30 to 40 days, if they are not sold, they keep eating and the farmer starts losing money. For farmers who do not want to depend on such a tight schedule, NEXTEKCI offers premium coloured broiler strains, raised over 3 to 4 months:

- premium red broiler: red-feathered chicks from the same family of coloured broilers known as Sasso, Redbro or ColorYield;
- premium barred grey: dark barred plumage, the equivalent of what many farmers call "Kuroiler" or "black broiler";
- premium hybrid: cross-bred, in red, barred grey or mixed colours, combining good growth and robustness.

These birds are hardy and adapted to hot climates. They suit intensive, semi-intensive and even backyard family farming, and produce firm, tasty, high-quality meat that is in strong demand at markets and for festivities. Farmers keep the freedom to sell at the right time.

White cockerels, an economical option to start a farm.

Brown layers, sexed females, vaccinated against Marek's disease at the hatchery, for egg production.

NEXTEKCI also produces table eggs and frozen chicken from its own slaughterhouse, and sells feed and farming equipment.

Supporting farmers before and after delivery

A good chick is not enough: the farmer must succeed with the flock. NEXTEKCI follows up every delivery for 72 hours and gives personalised advice. The hatchery also offers farmers two free artificial-intelligence assistants, available 24/7 and specialised in poultry farming in hot climates:

- Maria, on the website www.nextekci.com;
- a WhatsApp assistant, on +225 05 44 83 27 79: farmers simply send a message, at any time, to get technical advice and information on strains, delivery and current prices. (The assistants answer in French.)

NEXTEKCI always advises farmers to work with their local veterinarian for vaccination, diagnosis and treatment.

"A farmer who succeeds with his flock is a farmer who comes back. With Maria, we want no Ivorian farmer to be left alone with a question, even at 2 a.m."

— Abdul Hussein Chouman, founder of NEXTEKCI

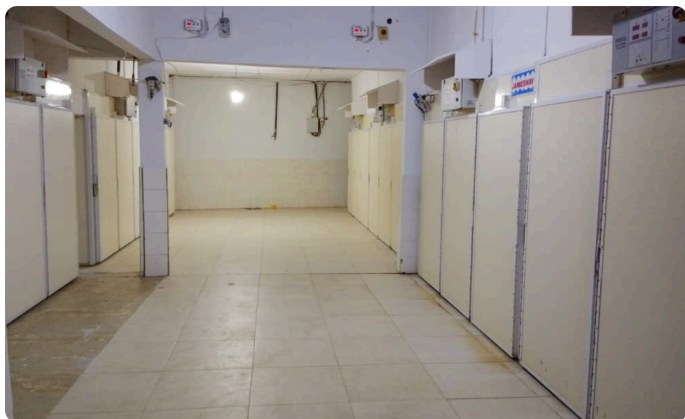

Chicks available throughout Côte d'Ivoire

Professional carriers deliver the chicks along three fixed routes, leaving on Mondays and Thursdays at 10 p.m. and arriving the next morning:

- Route 1: Agnibilékrou → Daoukro → Bouaké
- Route 2: Agnibilékrou → Bongouanou → Dimbokro → Yamoussoukro → Bouaflé → Daloa
- Route 3: Agnibilékrou → Abengourou → Akoupé → Adzopé → Abidjan (Yopougon)

Three new routes are being prepared towards Lakota, Soubré and Gagnoa. Everywhere else, farmers collect their chicks at the hatchery, at the arrival point of a route, or through their own carrier.

Open to the region and to partners

Located in eastern Côte d'Ivoire, near the Ghanaian border, NEXTEKCI is open to exchanges with farmers and poultry-sector stakeholders across the region, including Ghana. The hatchery also welcomes partnership proposals: parent stock, incubation and farming equipment, feed, and animal health.

About NEXTEKCI

NEXTEKCI (also written NEXTEK CI) is a professional hatchery founded in 2006 in Agnibilékrou (Côte d'Ivoire) by Abdul Hussein Chouman. It produces and sells day-old chicks (white broilers, premium red broilers, premium barred grey, premium hybrids, white cockerels, brown layers), table eggs and frozen chicken, as well as poultry feed and equipment, and provides technical support to farmers across the country.
